David

(male)

David Beckham

My name is David. This name has a Hebrew origin, and it means "popular, favourite".

The first people who carried the name David were Israeli Kings. Other forms of the name are Davy, and Dave. My nicknames are Darko, Duli and Dular, but they all come from my surname.

I was given the name David by my mum. At the time when she was pregnant with me, her female cousin was also pregnant, and it is funny that she wanted her newborn child to have the same name. They talked about it a lot, but could not compromise. In the end they agreed that, since they did not live in the same house, they could give their sons the same name – and they did.

I am proud that my name is popular all over the world. The three really famous people are David Beckham, the English football representative and Real Madrid player (on the photo), David Coulthard, F1 racer for Red Bull, and David Copperfield, one of the best illusionists in the world.

Andrej

St. Andrew

My name is Andrej, and obviously everybody likes it as it is, because I do not have any nicknames. It is also very popular, in fact it is the sixth most common name in Slovenia.

The name originates in a Greek adjective meaning a brave man and was given to me by my father, while my mother wanted to name me Matej.

What I like about this name is that it is very popular and it appears in different forms all over Europe: if I lived in Estonia, I would be called Andres, I could be André in France or Portugal, or Andrea in Italy. The closest forms are Slovakian Andrej and Romanian Andrei.

A lot of important people carry the same name: Andrew Jackson, Andre Citroen, Andy Warhol, André Malraux, Andrej Saharov, Andrzej Wajda, Andres Valdes, André Gide, and these famous Slovenes: Andrej Šifrer (singer), Andrej Smole (writer), and Andraž Vehovar (Olympic medalist).

To me, the most interesting person is the apostle Andrew (on the photo), the patron saint to Russia, Greece, and Scotland.
