Collaborative project in class - class to class

We in iEARN are doing collaborative projects in most of the subjects. By using ICT of various kinds, lots of them very simple, I will show how we work in the PBL method.

By teaching and studying in a collaborative way you get a class from different part of the globe and you and your students are extending the walls of your class.

Even teachers, begin to fill that they are part of global class and the creativity and teaching for understanding are going from the "big" class to you and from you to other teachers.

I will demonstrate it with "Daffodils and Tulips project" and "Talking kites all over the world"

Background: Students make kites to fly as a massive tribute dedicated to advancing the cultural and social dialog, a symbol of bridging the gap and understanding the "other." This will hopefully become a continuous tradition of flying kites with personal and group images of our dreams for a better world, a world of co-existence, tolerance, acceptance of the "other" and peace.

Skype as a language-learning tool

I am a Spanish teacherI began using Skype last semester for language exchange with native Spanish speakers all over the globe. The response from both native English and Spanish speakers was exciting.

....These virtual exchanges are taking language learning to a new three dimensional realm.

International experiences at the click of a mouse.

Looking forward to further collaboration
